908th Flying Training Wing Commander's

STAND ON SAFETY

The mission of the 908th Flying training Wing is to Develop and Deliver Multi-Capable Airmen. The safety and well-being of our people both on and off duty and the preservation of our assets are paramount to our success. As Commander, I assume the overall responsibility for your safety. I gladly accept that responsibility, but I cannot do the job on my own.

We have a well-qualified and motivated staff to assist and advise me in this effort, but that isn't enough. Our success requires the ceaseless efforts of commanders, supervisors, and Airmen who apply sound principles to minimize risk while achieving the mission. I direct commanders to find an acceptable risk to achieve mission accomplishment. It is every airmen's responsibility to maximize our warfighting capabilities and to protect Airmen through the prevention of mishaps, injuries, and fatalities.

I expect commanders and supervisors to set the right safety culture in their organization and to support safety programs. This requires proactive supervision from leaders at all levels who are willing to be introspective and objective to identify and assess hazards in their organizations. The appropriate decision-maker must select and implement the controls at the right level to reduce or eliminate the risk of encountering the hazards. Everyone is responsible for applying sound Risk Management principles in all their activities. You are essential to the Air Force achieving its mission, indispensable to your purpose, and irreplaceable to your loved ones!
